Written by Friedrich Ragette Photographed by Burnett H. Moody. By the late 1960's, the first uncertain efforts to merge the Arab world's scant architectural traditions with modern international design (Aramco World, May-June, 1971) had become a trend. The success of Minoru Yamasaki's fine air terminal in Dhahran encouraged the area's fledgling architects and their western consultants to reevaluate the "Arab" themes once common in the Middle East, but now losing ground to impersonal foreign ...
