Weapon Law: Firearms is a Rolemaster supplement, aimed at helping create Napoleonic to Modern settings where firearms are used. While Rolemaster may have been made in the 1990s, this supplement helps cover firearms, rate of fire, reloading and/or aiming. While the supplement does cover specific maneuvers such as single, double-tap, three-bullet burst, five-bullet spread, rapid fire, aimed rapid fire, among others, it does not explain strongly how to implement these.

Hurin's recent post got me thinking about combat and general and Rolemaster's combat in particular and how various Rolemaster products handle firearms. That (of course) led me to thinking about how I've revised those rules for settings outside of standard fantasy. It also got me thinking about the proposition that lots of combat mechanics equals an emphasis on combat.
