St. Augustine - St. Augustine - Confessions: Although autobiographical narrative makes up much of the first 9 of the 13 books of Augustine's Confessiones (c. 400; Confessions), autobiography is incidental to the main purpose of the work. For Augustine, "confessions" is a catchall term for acts of religiously authorized speech: praise of God, blame of self, confession of faith.

Confessions. Having achieved both some understanding of God (and evil) and the humility to accept Christ, Augustine still agonizes over becoming a full member of the church. Book VIII tells the story of his conversion experience in Milan, which begins with an agonizing state of spiritual paralysis and ends with an ecstatic decision (in a Milan garden) to wholly embrace celibacy and the Catholic faith.

Confessions: Book VIII | SparkNotes

The story of the Confessions is the story of Augustine's return to God, so it is appropriate that story should begin with Augustine's tribute of praise to the God he loves. In making a confession of praise, Augustine says, he is also demonstrating his faith, because he is not praising some distant or unknowable deity; God is as close to him as his own life and experiences, always

The City of God, Augustine's great apology, was prompted by this symbolic event, though it is by no means just a response to pagan polemics. Augustine's life ended when the Vandals besieged Hippo; he is said to have died with a word of Plotinus on his lips (Possidius, Vita Augustini 28.11, after Plotinus, Enneads I 4.7.23-24). 2.

Heartfelt, incisive, and timeless, The Confessions of Saint Augustine has captivated readers for more than fifteen hundred years. Retelling the story of his long struggle with faith and ultimate conversion -- the first such spiritual memoir ever recorded -- Saint Augustine traces a story of sin, regret, and redemption that is both deeply personal and, at the same time, universal.
